

Tse'Yi'Gai High School and Teacherages

This is a brand-new high school to serve a community that currently has to bus its children almost three hours each way. The site is located in the heart of Chaco Canyon National Monument, which houses historic Anasazi Indian ruins. Planning included several members of the state's archaeological department and historical commission to ensure that site disturbance is limited. The number of students in the area is difficult to estimate because they are split among three different school districts. The new facility accommodates 500 students, with expansion capabilities for up to 800. The new high school has all-new athletic facilities associated with it, as well as a campus of residential housing for the teachers to stay on site.

The project is being constructed in four phases: Phase I included the main building and the classroom wing (67,728sf); Phase II involved the residential teacher housing (25,789sf); Phase III consisted of the sports field, and Phase IV will include the auditorium and music rooms (15,581sf). The entire project cost around $20 million, which included bringing utilities to the site.
